

The Importance of Being

We get distracted by the “stuff” of life, our material possessions.
But if you’ve ever disposed of a person’s belongings after they’ve died, you know how quickly all our treasures go from priceless
to worthless.

We also get distracted by our doing.
Don’t misunderstand me:
our actions are critically important.
But our Christianity is rooted in being,
not doing.

First and foremost, our Father is concerned about our moment-by-moment relationship with Him.

He wants us to love Him,
trust Him,
turn to Him,
talk to Him, and
rejoice in Him.

He wants our thoughts and
desires
to revolve around Him in the eternal now.

My destiny does not center around material things.

I am His child,
destined to share the
life,
love,
authority, and
eternal glory

of His holy Son, Jesus Christ.
The Father wants my consciousness to be filled with Him,
just like Jesus Christ.

But He is not a harsh master, driving us to a duty.

He is a loving Father,
gently,
oh-so-patiently
drawing us closer.

His burning desire is to bless us with Himself.
